RSI Launches New Information Security Practice

New York, NY. Risk Solutions International (RSI) announced today its launch of a new Information Security advisory practice.

The New York-based operational risk consulting firm described this new practice as a natural complement to its portfolio of business continuity, IT disaster recovery, emergency and crisis management practices which it provides to public and private sector clients in the U.S., and globally through its membership in the Brokerslink Alliance.

The Information Security Practice was developed by RSI executives with deep backgrounds in security and technology and is designed to help organizations define and implement successful information security solutions that fit their unique circumstances, maturity levels and funding constraints. It includes a fast-track executive level program that provides management with an evaluation of the strengths and weaknesses in organizations' information security practices and a roadmap for closing gaps between their programs and benchmarked industry practices.

Michael Corby, Vice President and practice leader said that "Information Security is consistently among the top operational risk concerns of business executives and public officials. Many recent information security compliance regulations have added specific expectations on how confidentiality can be maintained, integrity can be assured and availability can be retained in all situations and under the most disruptive conditions. RSI has the necessary experience in both planning and response to create a provable program that is both responsive and cost effective."

He went on to discuss the growing challenge to public and private organizations by increasingly sophisticated attacks and threats to information security at a time when success depends on availability, and decisions demand reliable data. He cited trends in heightened cooperation between IT and business risk managers, as the latter are beginning to pay closer attention to the risks inherent in how their organizations design and manage complex data and information systems, as they buy insurance.

“Good security is easy for companies with unlimited resources and lots of time,” said Scott Corzine, senior vice president of Risk Solutions International, “but none of our clients enjoy that luxury with today’s fiscal realities. So we work hard to identify with clients intelligent compromises they can make between budget limitations and the regulatory requirements that they must meet in their information security programs, as they come to depend more than ever on information-based processes.”

The trend toward more active risk and threat analysis and potential loss modeling on the part of risk managers at many companies with regard to their information security exposures, and their more active coordination with IT managers was cited by Risk Solutions International as an impetus for creating its Information Security practice.
